Majority Report of Committee on the Amend-

House of Nobles, Aug. 12, 1862. The undersigned, your Committee to whom was referred the amendments to the Constitution passed by the Hon. House of Representatives, and the amendments proposed by His Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, bog respectfully to report that they have carefully considered the matters committed to them, and now recommend to the House of Nobles to adopt the amendments passed by the House of Representatives. because they approve of them so far as they go. And your Committee are of the opinion that at this stage of the session, which they hope is near its close, it is not expedient to take up for consideration any new amendments.

Minority Report of Committee Upon Amendments to the Constitution.

The undersigned, appointed as a committee by the House of Nobles, to consider the articles of amendment cies of the administration, and after 'provision' in ticles of amendment presented in this House by Mr. | granted.' Wyllie, on the 28th ultimo, have the honor to present the following report :

There will never be harmony in the State, or perfect political repose, until all these discordant elements are properly blended and assigned to the condition they ought to oc-

The Constitution of 1852 was perhaps wisely conceived, but no one can examine its provisions without noticing that it is one cided in its effects-discarding the neuce e-uld pretend to justify.

Systems of government are generated, not made by arbitrary construction. They grow up from circum-stances of habit, of long-continued policy, or ancient habit or usage. The old Hawaiian institutions were feudal, or, at least, semi-feudal. They admitted none of the Republican ideas of self-government based upon a full and unqualified popular representation. Here was the grand mistake of the framers of our Constitution. They seem to have fancied that Hawaii was a part of the American Union, and that all the laws, in-stitutions and usages of the descendants of Anglo-Sixon freemen were adapted to a nomadic people just emerged correct. But the Government is a Monarchy. The institutions of the country should partake of the same character. A Royal head and a Republican body are wholly incongruous, just as much as the reverse would be.

With all its good qualities, with the entire sum of its excellencies, the Constitution of the kingdom needs revision and thorough amendment. It does not suit the times or the character of the country. It is unfit for the style of institutions under which we profess to live. The efficiency of the Government is impaired by its cumbrous machinery, and the dignity of the Sovereign horn of its chief solendor. It is not unjust to add that horse of its chief solendor. It is not unjust to add that horn of its chief splendor. It is not unjust to add that delivery of his Majesty's speech.'

the presperity of the people, the development of the national energies, and the general good are greatly retarded by the slow, uncertain, and inefficient administration of public affairs, which now necessarily exists. The amendments proposed by the House of Representatives are based upon correct principles, and may generally be approved. But they do not go far enough. They are defective in a want of extent more than in substance. The amendments pending in this House are minute, well conceived, and well calculated to introduce salutary reforms. If in the sense of the last Article of the Constitution, it be deemed desirable to submit amendments for the consideration of the people and the action of the His Royal Highness Prince Lot Kamehameha, the heirs next Legislature, it will be well to consider them together, and embody all their excellencies in a single But if the Constitution be radically defective, if it be conceded that it fails to promote the highest welfare of the people, and of the State, there is a more direct remedy which can lawfully be applied.

There is a gradual and tedious mode of amendment provided by the last Article of the Constitution itself. Formerly, when there were annual sessions of the Legislature, there was no great difficulty. But now we have biennial sessions, and four years are required to institute even the most common reform. Fortunately we are not restricted altogether, either legally or politically, by the terms of that Article. Amendments may be adopted in the manner pointed out by it, but it does not follow that they must be so established.

Almost all the American State Constitutions provide as ours does, for gradual revision through legislative and popular action, yet everybody knows that conventions are constantly called to change the fundamental laws. It is a sound political maxim that the power of the State which confers the rights of government may modify and regulate them so as to promote the public interests and welfare in the highest degree. Thus, in acts shall be approved in the mode prescribed by law, the United States, the people from whom all power is immediately derived, often change the details of their institutions.

> Here, popular rights and free institutions were the nagnanimous grant of the Sovereign. The political freedom of the subject, and the forms under which our liberties are maintained, emanated from his unbiassed benevolence. He gave us nationality; he established permanent order; he laid, by divesting himself of power, the foundation of popular liberty.

> The inference to be drawn from these considerations is, that the Sovereign may, if in his opinion the good of the country requires it, initiate a revision of the Constitution without being fettered by the special forms of amendment prescribed by its terms. He can submit of his own will, a new fundamental law for the consideration of the different estates of his kingdom, or call a convention of those estates to devise a modification of the existing mechanism of government. The authority of initiation is in his hands But at the same time, either of the other estates are privileged to offer respectful suggestions. The Legislature is in session. The chiefs and the people are present by representation, and may easily agree upon some plan of action to promote the general

The proposed amendments of the House of Representatives, and those brought forward in this House, as well as the Constitution itself, should be referred to such commission, with instructions to give them a fair and careful consideration, such as the dignity of the or more Circuit Judges, not exceeding three, shall be subject, the interests of the people and the welfare of

In view of these reasons, as expressed in the foregoing paragraphs, the following joint resolution is respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Legislature:

Be it resolved by the King, the Nobles and Representatives of the Hawaiian Islands, in Legislative Council assembled: That three Commissioners be appointed, one to be chosen by the King, one by the House of Nobles, and one by the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to revise the Constitution, and on or before the beginning of January, 1863, submit their action to His Majesty the King for such consideration as in his wisdom may be deemed expedient; that their project of amendment to the old Constitution, or such new stitution as they may devise, be published by them in the public journals for information, in the Hawaiian and English languages, and that the same in His Majesty's discretion be submitted for ratification or adoption to the Legislature at any special or regular session thereof.

The foregoing are the views of your Committee. They made against him, and an opportunity of being heard are submitted with great deference to the Nobles of the kingdom, with the full assurance that they will be considered as having been dictated only by motives which concern the public welfare, the perpetuity of free institutions, and the lasting rule of the dynasty of the race of Kamehameha. All of which is respectfully submitted,
